

THE RECORDINGS OF MARY DIXON

An Annotated Tentative Personnelo - Discography

Storyville 148-156: L. Wright: "Mary Dixon is one of those ladies renowned for her robust delivery on her Columbia sides, but this coupling, her first, is rather more sedate, but still a first class record with excellent accompaniment from J.C. Johnson and a cornet believed to be Louis Metcalf."

Alan Balfour, booklet to Document DOCD-5504: "There is no controversy concerning the identity of Mary Dixon, even there exists no supporting biographical information to confirm it, other than she was remembered to be Texan." is one of those ladies renowned for her robust delivery on her Columbia sides, but this coupling, her first, is rather more sedate, but still a first class record with excellent accompaniment from J.C. Johnson and a cornet believed to be Louis Metcalf."

This trumpet player may well be Metcalf as assumed for so long now. He displays a fat tone, good technique and phrasing, but there is nothing to unequivocally identify Metcalf from. Yet, searching for an alternative name for this player is useless: there is no! But I am a bit astounded of this trumpeter's soft and tension-less performance. This might have been the consequence of Metcalf's time with Ellington and other high-graded bands and their professional and legitimate delivery. Compared to the trumpeter on Mary Dixon's session of 24 August 1929 below – who very distinctly is Metcalf – there remain doubts as to this musician's identity with Metcalf. This player almost sounds like a white player. It would be interesting to get to know the source for this personnel!

J.C. Johnson hailed from Chicago and – although living in New York for a long time of his life – stylistically did not belong to the group of Harlem Stride pianists. His approach to the keyboard was less rhythmic and swinging, but more bringing his compositional talents to the fore.

Oh yes, this certainly is Ed Allen's delicate delivery. Played with beautiful taste and softness as known from his many recordings with Clarence Williams. Tasteful J.C. Johnson on piano, very much underrated and undeservedly mostly unknown today.

Ernest Elliott in person. After ten years of experience and development he still is his dated self. And it is not surprising that at the start of the Swing era these two sides seem to be his last appearance in a recording studio. He had fallen out of his time.

This certainly is Metcalf with his own double-time phrasing as heard so often in Ellington's recordings, and his beautiful and big tone. The trio is completed by J.C. Johnson's rhapsodic style, rhythmically more on the Chicago side. The full-bodied guitar is restricted to plain rhythm playing, with the only exception to play a single-string break in the introduction of Black Dog Blues. With regard of the Wabash Trio recordings of J.C. Johnson of this same month and year I opt for the possible – or probable – presence of Bernard Addison.

Very beautiful Ed Allen of Clarence Williams fame undeniably here with his cornet. There is great and very melodic double-handed piano playing, stylistically certainly by J.C. Johnson.

I very much doubt Socarras' presence. Socarras technically was a much better player, but he played less bluesy than this player here, and his rhythmic approach was less swinging, but stiffer in the kind of the Carribean players. I would therefore list this player as unknown. I do not know any player possibly being responsible for these clarinet sounds.
