Having started my listening duties with the second session below, which – according to Ch. Gaines statement – definitely had been recorded with him on trumpet – I listened to this first session a bit later, but have to report that the musicians obviously are identical to those of the next session, but without the violin. In Russ Shor’s IAJRC article (see below) Gaines told about Freddie Keppard’s presence in Philadelphia a couple of years earlier, and that he had been taught “a lot” by him. (Incidentally, in his article on Gaines in Storyville 68 - by the same author – we are told that: “We all tried to sound like him but he was a stuck-up kind of guy and wouldn’t show you anything (Gaines)” Be that as it may, but it can certainly be assumed that Keppard left a lot of influence in Philly when he left town, especially on a young promising trumpet player.

In ‘Royal Garden Blues’ at the end of the first strain B you can hear the trumpet with some “laughing” device at c. 1:22 min, which is also known from Keppard in Doc Cook’s ‘So This Is Venice’ of some years later. So, this might have been some of the lot that Gaines learnt from Keppard?

The names of the other participating musicians are known from Bradford’s recollection: Earl Granstaff as a forceful and functional harmonic trombonist without ambition to solo, Ben Whitted (not Whittet – KBR) - as the always dependable reed man in Charlie Johnson’s band for nearly two decades – on tasteful clarinet playing chordal arpeggios most of the time, and – as Bradford calls him – “the old reliable sax-shark (who gave the record a big lift)” - Nelson Kincaid, who plays strong harmonic middle parts.

The second title is dominated by Nelson Kincaid’s strong alto sax in the accompaniment – the rest of the band staying in the background. And we hear astonishingly strong and reliable piano comping from Charlie Johnson. He leads the whole procedure from the piano stool.

According to Charlie Gaines’ own statement did he record “I’m Gonna Jazz My Way Right Straight Thru Paradise” (IAJRC Vol.10, No.2). What can be heard of Gaines is an ad-lib introduction in the first title with accented triplet phrasing in Johnny Dunn style, the remaining parts played straight from an arrangement, falling into triplets again at the very end of the tune. Gaines’ playing in the second title also seems to be following arranged parts, with frequent triplets phrasing again as before, as well as a lot of grace notes. So, at this early time Gaines certainly is a strong follower of Johnny Dunn’s predominant model.

His musician colleagues are the same as in the session before. Yet, they have added a violinist in George Breen as it was the use in those days. But was it an advantage or a benefit? I wonder.

For these two sessions Rust and BGR list Addington Major as alternate trumpet player, but Major owns a rather straight and simple (subdued?) style as heard in Mamie Smith’s recording sessions of August 10 and September 12, 1920, and can thus be neglected here!.

In IAJRC Gaines recounts that five recording sessions followed. This would probably mean that any of these Mary Stafford sessions had been accompanied by the Charlie Johnson band of the day. And certainly does this session feature the same band with Charlie Gaines on trumpet as before. In the introduction to the first title Gaines delivers some “peppery” growl tones as he might have learned from Keppard, together with a lot of his Dunn derived triplet phrasing in the further course of the tune. The coda shows his use of grace notes as a melodic device.

Trombonist and clarinetist certainly are the same as before again, but they have left out Nelson Kincaid. The discographies still list a second reed man – perhaps on tenor sax, but I feel unable to discover any. Maybe, there is a tenor player very soft in the middle ground, but intuitively I would deny this. Also, I can’t hear a brass bass/tuba.

This certainly again is the Johnson band as related by Perry Bradford. I hear Charlie Gaines and Earl Granstaff as before. But I have slight doubts on Whitted’s presence on clarinet here as this player plays shrieky at times, what Whitted did not before, and he uses trills what Whitted neither did on the previous 6 titles. Other instances, yet, seem to show Whitted. Maybe he was instructed to play more “fashionable”? A tenor sax playing middle parts can distinctly be detected now, for instance in the third bar of the introduction of ‘Wild Weeping Blues’.

A tuba can be heard faintly in the background (see second title at 2:04 min) and might thus be John Warren as shown in the well-known band photo in ‘A Pictorial History of Jazz’, p.108. (This photo, by the way, shows exactly this Charlie Johnson band of 1920/21 – with some additional musicians - and not the one of the late ‘20s as given!)

This trumpet player is not as aggressive and assured as Charlie Gaines on the previous sessions, and I assume him to be Addington Major, if not somebody else. Yet, we have to keep in mind, that Gaines in his interview/article possibly said that “five more recording sessions followed”. As this sentence is not stated to be direct speech, it might also mean that the interviewer took this statement from his discography, supposing that Gaines was present on all these six sessions by Mary Stafford. But, if Gaines stated this to his interviewer, it would necessarily be him on this and the next session, too. But I hear distinct differences in trumpet playing on these two last sessions. Granstaff seems to be right. The clarinetist is a bit shrieky again, and therefore not necessarily Whitted. There seems to be an alto sax playing the middle parts, and can be heard together with the trumpet in ‘Down Home Blues’ chromatically in the breaks in the middle of the first and third blues choruses. Obviously Charlie Johnson leads from the piano.

The overall sound suddenly is different, but this may be caused by a different recording studio as the band still seems to be the same. The same problem re the trumpet player arises, but I think it is not Gaines. Trombonist and clarinetist appear the same as on the previous session, but here we have a prominent tenor sax player whose name must remain unknown as in the fourth session. Johnson again on piano.

We can apparently be quite sure of Gaines' presence on these two sides as documented in Tom Lord's 'Clarence Williams'. Gaines also provided insights into Williams' modus operandi: Williams had contracts with a steady roster of musicians who were on call for recording sessions, both instrumental and blues accompaniments. I hear Gaines' straight and horizontal approach, more into rhythmic and staccato than melodic playing. He uses a cup mute here.

There is a very agile soprano saxophone player on these sides who phrases much too "jazzy" to be Elliott, judging from everything we have heard from Elliott up to now. There really are no instances of anything of Elliott's stylistics. This player belongs to a better and more modern class of musicians and resembles in part Buster Bailey of the Clarence Williams Blue Five period. He uses many rhythmic and melodic devices of the "Armstrong" period and does thus not belong to Elliott's pre-Armstrong school. As there are not many – if at all? – distinct soprano players around in New York/Harlem, the identity of this man should be searched for among tenor saxophonists (Bb instrument!) of the time: Prince Robinson, Happy Caldwell and others come to mind. Elliott may safely be excluded.

Charlie Gaines named Mike Jackson as pianist, not Clarence Williams. And when listening to this recording lately I fell upon this pianist's um-pah um-pah playing in the second title, a device Clarence Williams does not use. In the first title the pianist plays Clarence Williams' usual all four two hands rhythm. So, would it be possible that we hear Williams in the first title and Mike Jackson in the second. The other musicians as above, but it has to be recognized that possibly Irvis – if it is he – had a bad day. Too much booze?

(This would be Numbers On The Brain.) The (Storyville – KBR) team lists Buster Bailey on soprano sax, Williams, and Christian. I (Tom Lord – KBR) have strong doubts about the identity of the reed player, and in view of the statement by Charlie Gaines, feel that Irvis, Elliott and Mike Jackson might be considered. According to WCA (W.C. Allen – KBR), Bailey was with Henderson on a New England tour. The estimation of the date is by the two sources mentioned above (Rust and Godrich/Dixon – KBR). Judging from the straight ahead, no-nonsense playing and the temporal correlation this trumpet player very probably is Charlie Gaines. The trombonist must remain unidentified for now. There might possibly be a connection to Carmelo Jari's working band, the Savoy Bearcats, thus perhaps James Reevy?

This is the first appearance of reed man Carmelo Jari in the Williams stable. His rather unique and personal style and tone was identified by our team by comparison with the recordings of the Savoy Bearcats. He will be a familiar name with Williams personnels from now on until the Bearcats leave for an extended tour of South America in May 1927. (The second title of this session was also part of the Bearcats' repertoire.)

This accompanying band is very probably identical to the before heard (see above). There might possibly be another trombonist here. After close and repeated listening members of our team still disagree on the identity of the singer on "Senorita Mine". Some believe her to be a different person from the singer on "What's The Matter Now" and "How Could I Be Blue" others still think her to be one identical person. Lord, p. 178 : "One fact indicating that this side (Senorita Mine) is from a separate session is that the singer on this title is different from the singer on all the other titles from the three Bessie Brown sessions. Eva Taylor and her son Spencer, upon hearing tapes of these three Bessie Brown sessions, felt that Senorita Mine was not sung by Bessie Brown, but by a white woman (whose name they couldn't recall) who used to come around the CWMPCC office for new material. Note this singer's peculiar pronunciation of Senorita (Seen-ee-or-ita: phonetic)." Note: info from Björn Englund N&N 60 !

 43429-2 St. Louis Blues Vic 21328, Frog DGF 8

The first title, 'Rhapsody In Blue', is a very dexterously condensed version of George Gershwin's piano concertino, without the piano solo part, yet, arranged for a dance band. It is known that every band of fame had to feature this composition of 1924 in their programs. This title bears no hot solos.

'St. Louis Blues' offers hot solos by Emerson Harper on clarinet, Wilbur de Paris on muted trombone, then a trumpet solo - played into the derby hat - on a minor blues chord scheme which I'd attribute to the first trumpet player, Frank Belt, played with a beautiful range. The following trumpet solo - played with a plunger mute - obviously by Charlie Gaines, shows his straight ahead linear and horizontal style, swinging, bluesy and jazzy.

The band plays very professionally and exact and verifies their excellent reputation. And: what a marvellous tuba player they have! And: this band offers the only really documented performances of banjo player Sam Speede. I hear two violins, contrary to the discographies. Very interesting is the writer's and interviewer's comment on this recording of 'St. Louis Blues' in IAJRC 10 - 2: "He also has a 1927 recording of the "St, Louis Blues" he made with Leroy Smith. His short plunger-muted outburst at the end of the work is the only saving grace in a hopelessly chaotic arrangement, reminiscent of Paul Whiteman."

And again a very professional and smooth performance. A first class orchestra - cultivated and expert, yet not as hot as I would have wished. The bell notes at the beginning of the introduction of the first title are played on orchestra bells, the bell like notes after the brass phrases - still in the intro - a little later are probably played by the drummer - or the pianist? - on a xylophone.

There might be a flute in the introduction to the second title, which also features a rather strange clarinet solo.

Unfortunately we do not hear any hot solos in these titles.

This is one of the all time classic jazz sessions of Harlem times, known to everyone interested in the music. From Eddie Condon's narration we have a true and dependable documentation of the participating musicians and the circumstances the session was arranged. Apart from that we here have one of the funniest stories about jazz music and musicians. This session then can serve as reference for the playing of any participant. Gaines is now majority opinion in our group, but Ed Anderson is also suggested, and it is certainly his own identical style rather than that of Anderson. Anderson displays a good amount of southern laziness which cannot be detected here. Everything is compatible to what we know of Gaines. The remainder of the band seems to have been recruited from the Charlie Johnson band of the time, although the brass bass could well be St. Clair in stead of Taylor.

Both Lord and the Storyville team suggest Gaines on the strength of the similarity of the trumpet playing to that on the Waller Buddies date of 1 March, 1929. Rust lists the clarinet as Ben Whitted (?), but Charlie Gaines suggests Ernest Elliott. According to information provided to Walter C. Allen by Helen Chmura the Okeh files list the singer as Margaret Webster.

This trumpeter's style and performance is exactly what can be resumed to be Gaines' style from the earlier recordings. Strong horizontal and linear playing, rhythmically emphasized, but lacking that southern laziness. Sometimes – but seldom - his time is a bit too hasty.

The clarinetist certainly is not Elliott for all what we know of this player. Our listening team suggested Arville Harris instead.

E-31559	My Man Is Good For Nothing But Love	Br 4685,	Archeophone 6006

This personnel obviously is taken from the Leroy Smith band. The discographies list Gaines as trumpet player, but I feel unable to really identify him, by lack of performance as a soloist. But the discographers forgot to hear and name the flutist. This man – as can be unmistakably heard - also plays the clarinet. This would probably mean that Emerson Harper plays the tenor sax throughout, at least in the first title. Although a very accomplished but unsung musician, he is not known to have played the flute. Because of stylistic reasons and the vicinity to Clarence Williams' circles I tend to name the flutist/clarinetist as Albert Socarras. But I have to add that somewhere in my memory there are snippets of a flute player brother of one of Harlem's band leaders. I only do not remember his very name (now I know: this is Q. Wooding, probably brother to Russell Wooding). Sam Speede does not play on the first title.

But listen to a very beautifully swinging band accompaniment of the second title. As I have been corrected by Mark Berresford some time ago, the prominent bass part is not by a tuba, but by the piano player's left hand! Yet, after repeated listening, I am not certain whether Mark is right here. I hear long sustained bass notes in 'Black And Blue' which very probably can not be played as such by a piano left hand. And the short bass notes in the second title sound too strong and low to come from a piano. So, I assume a tuba player here and have listed as a possibility the Leroy Smith band's wonderful tuba player Fred Peters.

Great!

The trumpet player is perfectly comparable to the previously recognized Charlie Gaines characteristics, thus Gaines! Darnell Howard had been suggested for the clarinet by reedman Emerson Harper (October 28, 1973 interview). Howard has been quoted as having played on a Clarence Williams recording session, but there is no evidence that he travelled to New York at this time. Certainly the characteristics of this clarinet player here are those of Arville Harris, whereas Howard owns a much more fluent and rhythmically regular style. Williams plays piano until just before the vocal on each side, at which point James P. Johnson takes over. Williams can be heard playing piano behind the celeste on 403280-C.

Despite the alternate proposition of Ed Allen by most of the team, KBR comes out in favour of Charlie Gaines – and insists. This, by the way, is a suggestion Bernhard Behncke of Hamburg, Germany, and has been stated for long!

After listening to everything available of Charlie Gaines I do certainly not hear Ed Allen, but Gaines here. Arville Harris is favoured by a majority on clarinet and there is no reason to doubt Frank Robinson on the sundry instruments, although no one really knows him.

And again I do not hear Allen, but very probably – almost certainly – Charlie Gaines again!

With coming out in favour of Waller as the pianist, despite doubts expressed by Laurie Wright and John Collinson, among others, and Harris as the clarinet player, this is far off any hitherto listed personnel, although we have to say that the former personnels mainly consist of "unknowns". Waller is suggested because of his alleged presence as "vocalist" and the rhythmical impetus heard here, which probably stems from the piano. Waller's alleged presence has been doubted in the past, yet what better proof for his presence could be gained than from his own son's statement when hearing this record completely unprepared?

In our listening group both Anderson and Charlie Gaines were discussed for trumpet and Anderson seems more likely in comparison with Gaines' solo work during the period. After repeated listening I am the more convinced that we hear Anderson on first and solo trumpet because of the clean and even tone and the lack of Gaines' vibrato. Also, the phrasing is not what we have got to know from Gaines. It is rhythmically more complicated and sounds more "southern". But there very probably is a second trumpet player who might well be Gaines.

The trombonist is uncertain: For many years now Fields has been suggested as trombonist on any recording with an unknown growl trombone that could not be attributed to Nanton. Thus Rust gives Geechie Fields. But we know only very little of this trombonist used by Morton's Red Hot Peppers in June 1928, but this man is in everybody's ear from that on when a growl trombone can be heard. But George Washington could also perform very convincing in growl style and has therefore also been suggested. Hicks is a suggestion, because he was band mate with Anderson in Willie Lynch's band - later Mills Blue Rhythm Band - at the time of recording and on aural grounds compared with his contemporaneous work with the Jungle Town Stompers, the Musical Stevedores and Jasper Davis/Georgia Gigolos. Harris is audible briefly in solo on clarinet. The lead alto is not Socarras and Procope is a possibility. The saxophone section sounds to be three-part, but as Clarence otherwise only hired two players - and only two players can be heard soloing - the second alto player has to be questioned.

Clearly Clarence Williams plays piano on the first title in his very own two-handed style. The much livelier piano in 'I've Found A New Baby' is James P. Johnson's. There is no banjo audible and present. The drum playing is restricted to cymbal playing and is definitely Casey as can be heard in the background to the first title at ca.1:07 min.

The IAJRC 10 - 2 interview states: "Gaines says he still gets "a kick out of those old sides." His favourite Clarence Williams title is "Whip Me With Plenty Of Love" which features liberal doses of his high voltage trumpet, as do the Waller items." This then will certainly mean that Gaines states his own presence on these sides, and that Henry Allen's presence can be disregarded since the trumpet style shown is not Allen's. So, this then should have settled the matter for the future. Other musicians are unquestioned.

Note that the titles are probably reversed on the original issues.

The first trumpet solo on 'If I Could Be With You' certainly is by Charlie Gaines. It's his style, tone and vibrato. Gaines' own testimony says that he "definitely was on these two sides". But there is a very agile second trumpet player, whose presence is discussed as a possible first Roy Eldridge appearance on records, but seems unlikely since, according to Chilton, Eldridge came to New York in October 1930. He might be the soloist on the second title. Yet it should be considered, that Eldridge might have been in New York before settling down there in October. Our listening team suggests Jonas Walker for trombone (very interestingly Charlie Green also has been listed as a "possible" some time). Listen to the sweet saxophone lead by Socarras! And his flute obligato. On clarinet and tenor sax is undoubted Prince Robinson. Harris is the likely banjo player.

The trumpet playing is fully compatible to what we know of Gaines - including tone, vibrato and a slight tendency to minor flaws when playing the parts. This also was discussed as a possible Roy Eldridge item, but has been denied because of the above noted reasons. The trombone is impossible to identify for lack of exposure. Socarras is identified on the strength of his flute playing, otherwise the number of reed players is uncertain. Harris is probable. I do hear only two reed players in the first title – as always with Williams – either alto plus tenor, or two clarinets, or flute plus tenor. In the second title then there is a three-part clarinet section and the first theme chorus is obviously played by four players, two altos and two tenors.

Piano is not easily to be heard, but I believe it is there, at least behind the flute solo. There is slight doubt about the banjo player being Leroy Harris. This banjo has a higher, more ringing sound than Harris'. It sounds a little tinny.

Lord and the Storyville team feel that the sound of the tuba is "too heavy" to be St. Clair, but might nevertheless be him.

(The unclear personnel, the emphasized use of sixths in the chords, and the temporal vicinity to the big band recordings Clarence made later this year, makes me think further about the personnel. I see the possibility of part of the Bingie Madison band being used here together with some musicians of Clarence Williams' own stable. Possibly Clarence recorded the first title performing his own arrangement, thus using only two reeds, Socarras and Harris. Then playing a stock arrangement of the second title, a little pepped up for four saxophones by leader and tenorist Bingie Madison, using his own arranging skill - and sixths, which you can prominently hear in the Madison band's recordings under the name of Clarence Williams (Oct. 31, 1930, Nov. 24, 1930, Feb. 19, 1931) and King Oliver (Jan. 09, 1931, Apr. 15, 1931). Thus the following musicians should also be considered to participate:

Bill Dillard – tpt; Jimmy Archey – tbn; Albert Socarras – alt, clt, flt; Henry Moon Jones – alt, clt; Arville Harris – ten, clt; Bingie Madison – ten, clt, arr; Clarence Williams – pno; Goldie Lucas – bjo; Richard Fullbright – bbs. This might perhaps have been a try-out for future collaboration?)

Russ Shor, IAJRC 10-2: "The Pearl (Theatre, Philadelphia – KBR) was also constantly filled with intrigue generated by its owner Sam Steful. "Blanche Calloway, Cab's sister, came in for a long engagement with Andy Kirk's band. Sam was Blanche's agent so he tried to ease Kirk out of his leader's role and put the groups under her name. At the same time, my (Charlie Gaines' - KBR) group was broadcasting over radio station WIP but Sam tried to switch show times around so Blanche would get the radio spot. I kept my air time and also made sure I played on those Victor recording sessions that he got for Blanche." Russ Shor, Storyville 68 p.48: "Sam was always tryin' to get Blanche's boys on the radio in our place, so I had to really look out for my guys, but don't worry 'cause I got all my radio time and Sam didn't bother me after that. When I was at the Pearl, I made records with Blanche Calloway. We drove down Ridge Avenue and across the bridge to Camden with some of Andy Kirk's boys, right after the shows. Eddie Battle took most of the solos though."

So, if we take this citation literally, Gaines did participate with one - or even more - Victor recording sessions of Andy Kirk's band under Blanche Calloway's name. Intensive listening displays a very good of the territory kind, but showing no sign of Charlie Gaines' participation. All trumpet solos show a youthful and developing Edgar Battle, but nothing to associate with Gaines. Gaines might have been a better soloist here. Yet, there are passages in the brass section where Gaines could possibly have been playing second or third parts to relieve Battle. But listen to Mary Lou Williams playing fantastic piano here, and listen to that great and unsung press role drummer Ed Thigpen!

Following Charlie Gaines' reminiscences above he might have played with Blanche Calloway's band on more than one session. I have listened through all the issued Blanche's Victor recordings. At no instance have I been able to identify trumpet playing distinctly by Gaines, although there are spots where he might be responsible: on 'It Looks Like Susie' and 'Make Me Know It' of June 11, 1931 there are trumpet parts that might be Gaines' playing. There might be others on the sessions of March 27, May 08, November 18, 1931. His style would certainly have changed considerably since the Fats Waller session of March 01, 1929.

This is Charlie Gaines' band of the day, limited mainly to play chorded background to Louis' performance. Yet, on 'When You're Smiling' Gaines can favourably be heard playing an own ad-lib background to Louis' vocal. Very nice, and much livelier and melodically more interesting than what we have heard from him earlier, and certainly more advanced than before. There is nothing to be said about Louis Armstrong, but there is Louis Jordan here among the personnel doing his first recording session ever. Of the Gaines band the pianist Wesley Robinson plays some good and assured piano bridges. But the rhythm is somewhat clumsy at times.

This is beautiful Clarence Williams music of the mid 1930's, with this lazy and swinging tuba and washboard beat. And – the top for me – Cecil Scott on clarinet and tenor. The history of this collaboration of Clarence Williams and Charlie Gaines may be taken from Tom Lord, 'Clarence Williams'. There are – for Clarence Williams rates – some very advanced arrangements played. They might have been brought by Gaines from his own band's repertoire.

It seems that Gaines leads the ensemble throughout. The only trumpet solo played in this session heard can be found in 'As Long As I Live', but does not show Gaines, but very probably Ed Allen in a more modern style of his than herd before, but still Ed Allen's. It is obvious that the Swing Era is beginning, and the music played tries to keep pace with the times. And Charlie Gaines was wealthier with $ 500 than before after this session.

GAINES, CHARLIE

(from: Fats Waller And His Buddies)

STYLE

Gaines does not play in a southern style. His style, though, is more rhythmical than melodic. His playing is somewhat quirky and a bit erratic, using long notes where you would not expect them, rather irregular. His playing is not marked by the use of harmonic finesse or elegance. Instead he ad-libs by playing a row of not melodically related notes, but varying their rhythmical relations. His general style might still show some influence from Freddie Keppard, as shown above.

TONE

Not clear, rather molded. Not, what we call a beautiful tone.

VIBRATO

Gaines uses very low – rather irregular – vibrato, lasting during the whole length of a tone, but increasing in frequency in the middle of a tone's duration, then lowering again (no final vibrato of tone as so often with other trumpeters). He often starts his notes with relatively strong vibrato, then immediately getting lower.

TIME

His notes come on the beat without dragging or being hasty. He displays good rhythmic feeling and drives the band along.

PHRASING

His ad-lib playing is linear, consisting of long phrases with little difference of altitude, mainly staying in a limited range of his trumpet. He does not play melodically, but more rhythmically, using his notes in rhythmical coherence to relate on the ground-beat. Thus he very often uses staccato notes. There is no singable quality in his playing.

SOURCES

Perry Bradford, Born with the Blues, p. 153: "Here's how Mary Stoddard (sic) became the second colored girl to crash the recording field, with a Negro jazzband accompaniment. It happened during the "Crazy Blues" popularity in December, 1920, when OKeh was taking Columbia's business by leaps and bounds; and Columbia dealers were bootlegging Mamie's records by the truckloads, though they were allowed to sell Columbia products only according to contract. Barron's was the hottest spot in Harlem and catered to all Broadway's biggest "ofay" stars and Harlem's big-shot gamblers, because the working class couldn't stand those prohibition prices. That made Barron's the most logical place to get a cross-section of views and mixed opinions, the best barometer understanding of how a record would sell in white and colored sections all over the country.

It was right down Mary Stoddard's (sic) alley, because she had been featuring "Crazy Blues" and "It's Right Here For You" nightly and the nightfifers were tipping just like their money had grown on trees. When Mr. Harris requested "Crazy Blues" she thought it was just another request, so Mary shouted the song, by going from table to table until she nearly collapsed. Then the customers started hand-clapping in unison., "We want 'It's Right Here For You.'" As this was her money song, Charlie Johnson sent Mary off again on "It's Right Here For You" as an encore.

This song happened to be the biggest cabaret and stage-song in the country at that time. Every burlesque show was featuring it and Jeanette Adair was goulting 'em in Ed Wynn's Grab Bag show – a Broadway production. Charlie Johnson saw how they were raining money on the floor for Mary, so he told Mattie Hite, "Go out there and help Mary, because we don't want to lose none of that gold." I happened to be in Barron's at that time, but didn't know who Mr. Harris was.

The following morning Mary Stoddard (sic) was yanked downtown post-haste to Columbia Studio, which was located at 59th Street and Broadway, and she recorded "Crazy Blues" and Clarence Williams' song "Royal Garden Blues." As Charlie Johnson's jazzband was playing at Barron's and made the audition with Mary, his band cut the record with her; because Mr. Harris wanted them to do "Crazy Blues" just the same as though she was entertaining guests – with no changes.

Mary made a great record, because she couldn't miss with this hot band of great stars sending her. She had Major on cornet; Ben Whitted was the clarinet man; Granstaff (who worked in vaudeville with George Davis) was the sliding trombone guy; Kincaid, the old reliable sax-shark (who gave the record a big lift); George Breen, with his violin, was added to make the record sound like Mamie's "Crazy Blues" record. Charlie Johnson, a sensational musician, was directing and playing the piano.

Mary had a low contralto voice which made her record sound deeper than Mamie's. But here's a secret I've never revealed before. No singer or jazzband could have topped Mamie's record of "Crazy Blues," for I made it my business to leave out 24 bars when we printed the sheet music."

IAJRC Journal, Vol. 10, No.2: Charlie Gaines, Philly's Maestro: "Mamie Smith was the rage then so Columbia came down and signed up Mary (Stafford – KBR) as competition. For the first session she took me and six other guys from the band (Charlie Johnson – KBR) and we drove up to New York to make two sides. Recording was hard work in those days. We had to blow into this big acoustical horn – they didn't have microphones in those days – and I mean we had to blow LOUD; doin' it over and over again until the technicians got it right. Charlie still has one of the records he made that day with Stafford "I'm Gonna Jazz My Way Thru Paradise", and still plays to it on occasion "as a warm up before a job. Five more recording sessions followed; then several job offers."

Storyville 69, Charlie Gaines: This article mainly is an abridged version of the IAJRC piece – with some minor unaccountable differences.

Bernhard Behncke, Charlie Gaines, replacing Ed Allen from October 1929 until August 1930: article published probably in VJM, on Gaines replacing Allen in Clarence Williams recording bands in the stated period.
